PROPOSALS

FOR PUBLISHING BY SUBSCRIPTION,

A SYSTEMATICAL GUIDE

OF THE

REARING OF THE VINE

And making of Wine, according to the best European methods, adapted to as to suit the climate of the Southern parts of the U. States.

BY CLEMENT DIEMER,

From the Seubert's part of Switzerland.

EXTENSIVE experiments, prosecuted for the last five years at the rearing of a Vineyard by the author of this Guide, having convinced him (and clearly established) that Georgia and her Southern States are all admirably calculated for the successful rearing of the wine-making Vine. In order to give practical as well as methodical directions to thousands of men who are constantly enquiring after proper instructions towards rearing Vine or Wine establishments, the writer, to remove all obscurity, publicly tenders the result of his experimental labors, as the most approved European vintners do, as a present for the last five years, in the preparing and laying off old and new ground of all descriptions, in the tending and planting generally by seed, layers, cuttings, grafting, budding, as also in the making of sour, sweet, and white Wines.

The regular monthly relation work from January to December, will be plainly directed, and as soon as three or four hundred subscribers be obtained, the Guide may be printed this Winter for sale.

Persons procuring ten subscribers shall be entitled to one book. Subscription Two Dollars, payable on the delivery of the book, or first number. Persons holding subscription papers, will please return them care of the subscribers to the work, directed to the author, at Hillsborough, Jasper county, Georgia, by the first or middle of December, 1892.

The newspaper Editors of the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Florida, Georgia, South and North Carolina, will confer a favor by disseminating the Vigner's Guide.

RASH VOWS.
"ON Jessy's lip have glowed such charms, I could not for my soul resist her; I caught her blushing in my arms, And in her bloom of beauty kissed her. Till panting, trembling, and afraid To give her tender bosom pain, I cried, forgive, forgive, sweet maid! I vow I'll ne'er offend again. I do forgive, she kindly cried, And sweetly arched her smiling brows, I do forgive, she softly sigh'd, But pry thee dear, make no rash vows."

From Henry Deale's Romance of History.

THE THREE PALMERS.

It was about the hour of noon, on a fine autumnal day, in the year 1193, that three men, whom their dresses, and the white shaves which they bore in their hands, proclaimed to be Palmers, entered the little village of Ginnacia, which is situated about five miles from the city of Vienna. They seemed worn with toil and travel, their garments were coarse and wretched, even for persons of their description, and they had suffered their hair and beards to grow to an immoderate length. He who seemed to direct, the movements of the three, was very tall, and displayed a figure of remarkably fine proportions. His limbs seemed of Herculean strength, his eyes were blue and sparkling, and his hair of a bright yellow colour inclining to red. As he strode along a short distance in advance of his companions, his gait and gestures gave him more the air of a monarch or a conqueror than of a meek and pious pilgrim. Occasionally, however, he seemed to recollect the sacred character which he had assumed, and to make an effort to tame down the superlative expression of his features into something like humility and sanctity. His companions were frequently seen, although with evident deference and respect, to revere him with him on his bearing, which he sometimes answered by altering the mode of his behaviour in the manner above mentioned; but more frequently by an obstreperous laugh, by lifting up his brawny hand, which seemed better fitted to grasp the battle-axe than the palmer's staff, or by caroling a stave or two of some popular Provencal ditty.

Another peculiarity was remarked in the conduct of the Palmers, as they travelled from town to town, that instead of soliciting alms, they seemed to be profusely supplied with money, which they expended freely and even lavishly. The tall Palmer too, for so he was designated, took great pains to conceal his features with his hood, and to avoid the castles and palaces of the great, which were the places into which such persons in general were most anxious to obtain admittance. On the present occasion they gave another instance of the strangeness of their conduct, by stopping at the miserable hovel which was the only thing in the shape of an inn or hostelry appertaining to the village of Ginnacia, instead of proceeding on to Vienna, where they might procure the best fare and lodging.

They had no sooner arrived at this hovel, than the contents of their wallet proved that they had not been forgetful of the wants of the flesh. A noble goose was produced and placed upon the spit, and the operation of cooking it was sedulously performed by the tall Palmer himself. The host's recommendations of his wines were not attended to; but the travellers produced their own flagons from their wallets, remunerating the host; however, in the same manner as if they had partaken of his vintage.

"By my troth," said the Palmer, as the dinner smoked upon the board, and his blue eyes flashed fire in anticipation of the banquet, "Multon-Doyley—our labour has not been in vain. Holy Palmers, show your piety by your zeal in appropriating the blessings which heaven has bestowed upon you."

"Reverend Father," said Deale, in a

While the Palmers were thus piously occupied, they had not observed a minstrel who entered the room, and placing himself at its farthest extremity, leaned upon his harp and gazed intently at them. There was a strange mixture of intelligence and malignity in the expression of his countenance, as he curiously scanned the features of the tall Palmer. When the song was concluded, he rose, and approaching the festive board, made a lowly obeisance. The reverend trio started as though they had seen a specter. "Ha!" said he who had answered to the name of Doyley; "Is the spy minstrel! What would ye widraus man? We are Palmers, with whose reverend characters it would ill accord to listen to the wanton and profane ditties of wandering minstrels."

"Nay," said the minstrel, "I know many a fine to which your ears may be rather aught listen, and your cheeks never blush. I can tell you of the exploits of good christian knights in the Holy Land, of holy Peter the hermit, of Godfrey of Bullgois, and of brave King Richard of England."

"Nay, nay," said the tall Palmer, "priests begone; we have our frugal meal to despatch, our prayers and penance to perform, and to retire early to our humble beds, that we may be stirring betimes in the morning."

"Ye are discourteous churls," said the minstrel; "and ye shall one day remember to your cost, that ye gave the minstrel neither meat nor drink, and would not listen to his ditty."

Thus saying, the minstrel took up his harp, and with a look of defiance left the apartment. Although the meal of the Palmers was not quite as frugal, nor their prayers and penances as exemplary as they wished the minstrel to believe, yet the beds on which they stretched themselves to pass the night, did not belie the humble character which they had ascribed to them. The travellers, however, were well disposed to slumber; and the fumes of the day's journey, as well as the fumes of the wine quaffed, combined to transform the three straw pallets which the host had spread out for them in their apartment into very luxurious couches. The tall Palmer's mind was not inactive, although his body was quiescent. A thousand visions, of a thousand things, presented themselves to the mind's eye of the steper. War and tumult, and ignominy, and imprisonment, and triumph, and love, and dominion, occupied by turns his imagination. Once he fancied himself entering a great city, amidst the acclamations of assembled thousands—warriors and statesmen and churchmen hailed him as their lord—a fair, and well-known face welcomed him with smiles—a disloyal and treacherous brother threw himself at his feet, craving pardon; and expressing penitence—and a reverend prelate placed a crown upon his brows, and breathed a benediction on the soldier of the cross. At that moment he thought that the fair lady laid her hand upon his arm, but her touch, instead of being light and gentle, was so heavy and violent, that it dispelled his dream, and starting from his sleep, he found himself in the grasp of an armed man. The tall Palmer, however, was not a person to be easily overpowered. As lightly as the host shakes the dew-drop from his mane, did he shake off his assailant, and then clenching his unarmed hand, aimed so tremendous a blow, at his steel casque that it fell him to the ground. He found, however, that the apartment was full of men, similarly armed, and that his own companions were secured and bound. The intruders, for a moment, shrunk back, appalled at the gigantic strength of their opponent. "Tis Diabolus," said one. "Tis he, or that other one whom we seek," returned another. "For no tongue could have aimed a blow like that; but close round him, we are surely too numerous, and too well arm-

said the Duke, "with his My good sir Faulk Doyley, Thomas of Malton, did you would allow you to tremble without paying you the cost?"

MORE DISCLOSURES.—Mr. Jonathan Russell has placed in our hands copies of a private correspondence between himself and Henry Clay, relative to the "secret night transactions at Ghent," which we intend in a few days to lay before our readers. Mr. Russell has been impelled to their publication by a sense of duty to the public, and in vindication of himself from the erroneous impression growing out of the imperfect view of his relation to Mr. Clay, heretofore published. The disclosure affects Mr. Clay's veracity, and his honor; and show his hostility to Mr. Adams in such a view; that we do not see how it is possible for Mr. Adams to retain Mr. Clay in office one hour, without further and lasting disgrace.—Wash. Telegraph.

THE WEST—A highly respectable citizen of the State of Indiana, writes the Albany Argus, that "every electoral vote in Indiana, Kentucky, Illinois and Missouri, will be given for the General—And be not surprised should the final result prove, that Ohio shall beat them all, and leave Adams with one solitary vote west of the mountains." Likely enough. A Jackson Committee of Indiana, writes to the Committee of Philadelphia, that it does "not consider Ohio doubtful, but certain for Jackson,"—and that it is "much mistaken if Mr. Adams gets a majority in ten counties of our State."—Rich. Eng.

JACKSON AND BURR.
A Suicidal Document.—Col. A. Erwin, in his reply to the vindication of the Nashville Committee, publishes a letter from A. Jackson, which completely exculpates him from all charge of the "alleged connexion" (as Mr. Clay calls it) with A. Burr. The letter bears date at Richmond, June 16th, 1807; and evidently suspects, "that whatever may have been the projects of Burr," Gen. Wilkinson was concerned with him. "Whether the testimony (says Jackson) will be sufficient to convince the minds of the grand jury that guilt exists either as to treason or misdemeanor, is problematical; I am more convinced than ever that treason never was intended by Burr; but if ever it was, you know my wishes, that he may be hung." Again: "All I wish is, that if guilt ever did exist, that all concerned may be punished—if they are innocent that they may be acquitted; but I have no opinion that it is just to sacrifice one, as a peace-offering to policy, and permit others of equal guilt to pass with impunity." And yet this is the man, who has been so presumptuously charged with plotting treason in full connivance with the projects of Burr! And this proof of his innocence comes from his avowed enemies! But, it is idle to refute this preposterous charge against Jackson.

We are informed that official information is received at the Department of State from Mr. Taylor, our charge d'Affaires at Rio de Janeiro, that he had effected satisfactory arrangements with the Brazilian Government, in the case of the brig Spark, which secures to the owners of that vessel the payment of the indemnity claimed by them, viz: the sum of 35,000 dollars; and that he is assiduously employed in the prosecution of all other claims committed to his charge, of citizens of the United States, upon the said Government.

LOST PAPERS.
WHEREAS John Bell was elected a member to the State Legislature from the county of Decatur, Georgia, for the year 1827, and died in Milledgeville during the session of said Legislature—the said Bell took off with him when he left home for Milledgeville, a packet of papers in his saddle-bags, the contents of which I cannot correctly describe, though part of said packet consisted of notes given by Isaac Lewis and William R. Cauldwell, payable to John Bell, guardian for Martha Ann Lasseter, or bearer, amounting to $432, dated on or near the 15th of January, 1827, due twelve months after date, together with many dry other papers, the greater part of which is to me unknown; and after the death of said Bell, his wife sent after his things, but the said packet was not found and has not yet come to light.—And whereas I have been informed that there is a report afloat in the county, that said Bell did send the said packet of papers to a friend of his some short time previous to his death, which if he did, it is entirely unknown to me; but if it should be the case, that any person or persons has the said papers in possession, or have any idea where they are or what has gone with them, I, being the administrator of said estate, do hereby request such person or persons, if there should be any such, to give me information of the same by letter, directed to the subscriber at Bainbridge, Decatur county, Georgia, and thus discharging your duty, you will oblige your friend, and be rewarded for what you may merit.
